

2015 GROWTH REPORT

MESSAGE FROM EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, JAMES FENTON

2015 saw the 17th year of existence for the Gallatin Economic Development Agency (GEDA). Officially established in March of 1999 by forward thinking city leaders to be governed by a five member Board of Directors, its mission was “to ensure Gallatin’s prosperity by serving as its catalyst for facilitating progressive and diverse economic development through anticipating, encouraging, managing and embracing viable community growth.”

This mission has been embraced not only by the GEDA, but by all departments of the city, as the growth the city has witnessed would not have occurred without proper planning, investment and continued vigilance by every person associated with the city. The planning and investment was reflected in the 33% growth in population between the 2000 and 2010 census that showed us with just over 30,000 residents. Along with that increase was an explosion of retail to serve that growing population. “Gallatin Gets It” became a mantra.

Gallatin is,
as one official opined, beginning to reach its stride.

That growth has continued with Gallatin welcoming a surge of newcomers to the area. Estimates now put the number of residents at nearly 34,500; a Special Census is underway to confirm that number. Fueling that growth, and continuing to reflect the planning and investment, has been an unprecedented announcement of jobs and capital investment in our city over the past three years. These announcements, centered largely but not entirely in the industrial sector, have helped Gallatin garner national visibility and accolades many cities across the United States would love to receive.

Robust interest in Gallatin continues, and is expanding in its make-up. The current pipeline includes retail, restaurants, tourist attractions and hotels along with manufacturing, suggesting the expanded focus of the GEDA is bearing fruit for the city.

Everyone should be excited about the success this incredible community is experiencing.

Gallatin is, as one official opined, beginning to reach its stride. To help expose that growth, we have undertaken a Branding Initiative that will accurately reflect all that Gallatin has to offer.

HISTORIC DOWNTOWN

Gallatin's historic downtown has transformed over the last several years, starting with a $2-million revitalization project that widened sidewalks, created plazas and pedestrian crosswalks, added trees and landscaping, as well as decorative lighting. The City received grant funding for two additional phases for a total of more than $3-million with federal awards covering 80% of the costs.

Gallatin's downtown now features unique retail stores, restaurants, and a marketplace for local artists to showcase their work.

Every summer, there are free concerts on the square and other events for the entire family. Gallatin's Historic Palace Theater hosts the ballet, movies and other shows.

The City has also completed its greenway that runs along Town Creek, linking the downtown to Triple Creek Park. This is another multi-million-dollar project funded 80% with federal grants.

BUSINESS IS GROWING

In 2015 alone, the City issued 275 new business licenses. These new ventures range from boutique clothing shops, to one-of-a-kind restaurants, new furniture options, children's shops, health care, and support services.

The City of Gallatin invests in amenities for the entire community. With nearly 600 acres of parks, several miles of greenway, a golf course, ball fields, bike trails, civic center, and much more – the city provides activities for every age and interest. The Civic Center alone includes a competition-size pool, sauna, racquetball courts, weight room, fitness classes, a basketball gym, walking track, and meeting rooms. Several areas of the parks can be rented for company parties, 5k races, and other events.

EDUCATION OVERVIEW

The State of Tennessee has launched education initiatives modeled on programs introduced first by Sumner County Tennessee where Gallatin is the County seat. One of them is The Tennessee Promise – a scholarship and mentoring program providing the opportunity for Tennessee high school, home school, and GED graduates to attend a community college free of tuition and fees. Another Initiative is Tennessee LEAP – Labor Education Alignment Program.

The goal of Tennessee LEAP is to eliminate skills gaps across the state by encouraging collaboration among education and industry utilizing workforce data to identify and then fill skills gaps. A third initiative is Tennessee Reconnect – a program to help adults with some college but no degree. Tennessee Reconnect allows adults to earn a diploma at any of the state’s 27 TCATs completely free of tuition and fees.

Sumner County has one of the first TCAT schools – a Tennessee College of Applied Technology – that provides training for specific manufacturing jobs in Sumner County. These all fall under the umbrella of Drive to 55 – a drive to get 55 percent of Tennesseans equipped with a college degree or certificate by the year 2025.

GALLATIN EXPANSION AND RETENTION

Gallatin Expansion and Retention is a program of the Gallatin Economic Development Agency that responds to the needs of our primary employers while promoting service-based businesses to help ensure their success. We partner together to address concerns as we continue to create the most business friendly environment possible.

GEAR meets quarterly each year.

SPECIAL 2015 CENSUS

Because of Gallatin's appeal, the city has grown considerably since the 2010 U.S. Census. So much so, that the City is conducting a Special Census to be completed and verified by the end of June, 2016. The uncertified count to date puts Gallatin's population at 34,487 – a 13.9% increase in 5 years. The updated population count means up to $2-million in additional state-shared funding over the next five years. It also increases awareness of Gallatin for more retail, business, and industrial recruitment. The Special Census was conducted internally using city staff, including door-to-door census-taking by the Fire Department.

INFRASTRUCTURE

ROAD PROJECTS

Gallatin has four major road projects reaching the construction phase in the next 18 months.

- ◆ The extension of Albert Gallatin/Hatten Track from N. Water/Dobbins Pike to SR 109 North where there will be an elevated interchange. This road is the state's largest locally-managed road project with a construction estimate exceeding $30-million with 80% coming from State and Federal funds. The 1.75-mile road will create a northern bypass for the city and open land for business development.
- ◆ The City has also received 100% State and Federal funding from the Tennessee Department of Transportation (TDOT) to widen Airport road to three lanes from Coles Ferry to north of Cairo Road. This 2-part project will allow the Sumner County Regional Airport to add more hangar space. It will also ease traffic flow for the recent expansion of existing industry including ABC Group and Hoeganaes.
- ◆ Another project that will continue to create a retail/residential development corridor is the extension of GreenLea Boulevard, a 5-lane road, from State Route 386 to Long Hollow Pike.
- ◆ TDOT is also nearing the construction phase of State Route 109 North from the new bridge over the Cumberland River to Airport Road. SR 109 North will be widened to 5-lanes. When the entire SR 109 North project is complete, it will create a 4-to-5-lane northern loop around Nashville from I-40/I-840 in Wilson County to I-65 near the Sumner County border with Kentucky.

109 BRIDGE WINS DESIGN AWARD

News Release • October 22, 2015

The State Route 109 Bridge over the Cumberland River received the highest honor in its category from the Tennessee chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects (ASLA) at the group's recent state conference.

Entries for the awards were judged by the North Carolina chapter of ASLA. Judges cited the work for its "wonderful example of humanizing large-scale infrastructure." The context-sensitive design elements on the bridge – lighting, walking/biking path, decorative railings, brickwork, and center island – were designed by Kimley-Horn.

The 4-lane bridge links Sumner and Wilson Counties. It took more than two years to build and opened in the spring of 2014. The Tennessee Department of Transportation plans to widen State Route 109 from Airport Road in Gallatin to Hwy 70 in Wilson County. The Gallatin section of SR 109 is projected to go out to bid for construction in 2016.
